To whom it may concern:

I strongly object to the protracted suits against Microsoft. As a user I feel that Microsoft has given me the best possible platform on which to run my computer. All other solutions (Linux) appear like solutions looking around for a problem - try to install it as opposed to Windows. As a former computer programmer, I can appreciate the complexity and work that went in to Windows development. Finally, as a shareholder I feel that I and the other shareholders have been punished enough with the devaluation of the shares since this case first got major publicity.

Enough is enough and the state Attorneys General should stop as well. Let's get on with the business of making Windows better and not having a company look over its shoulders all the time.
